A summer's day that starts out all bright and sunny and by its end nothing is ever the same again – that is the day when Annika's cousin Ginie disappears. Just a short while ago the two of them had been sunbathing by the water's edge with Annika's friends Steffi, Rüdiger and Jonas, and now Annika and the others are scurrying about in the pouring rain looking for Ginie.

Finally, the police is alerted and the nervous tension is mounting by the minute. Although they have been close friends for many years, rather than being supportive they start blaming and accusing each other. Gradually disturbing stories begin to surface, things Annika had no idea about, and finally Steffi says out loud what everyone has been thinking all along: is it possible that Rüdiger who seems so reserved has done something to Ginie? At first Annika refuses to believe it, but all the evidence points to him as the culprit. And although Rüdiger is shocked that of all people his closest friends should suspect him of such an awful thing, he does nothing to clarify the situation.

Meanwhile, as Annika has discovered that there are a few skeletons in the cupboard in her supposedly happy family, she feels that she must speak to Rüdiger on his own...
